Introduction

Dear film lovers, friends and colleagues,

The Croatian Audiovisual Centre, the governing film body in Croatia, has pledged its continued support to the audiovisual sector, to boost creativity and promote a wider understanding and circulation of our films on the international circuit.

Croatian films come in all styles and genres, drawing on the whole range of human experience and frequently focusing on some uncomfortable truths. Stylistic diversity and a high volume of production for such a small country are the two prevailing characteristics of modern Croatian cinema.

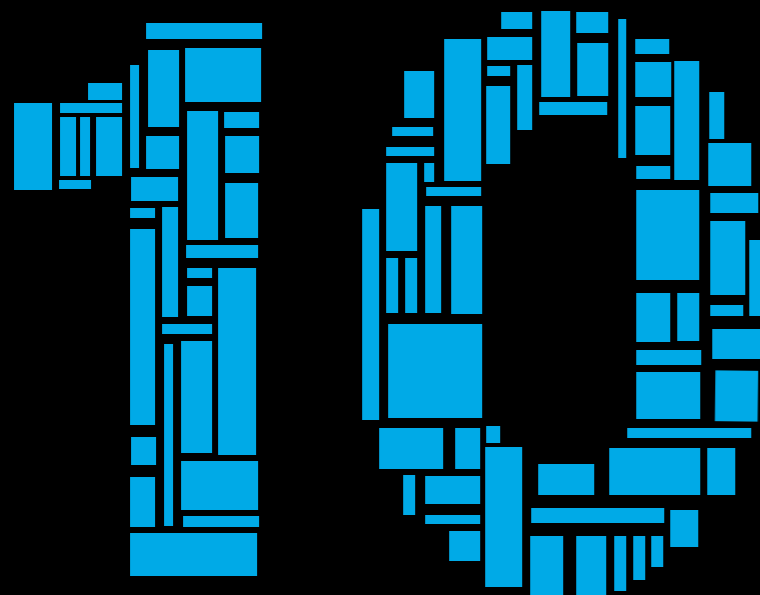

Documentary films are enjoying worldwide success at the moment and Croatia is no exception in following this trend. The quantity and quality of documentaries made in Croatia is staggering. Thematically, Croatian documentary makers often share a passion for social justice, while taking diverse and fresh approaches to their subject matter.

In this volume of the catalogue Croatia(n) Mov(i)es 2010/2011 you can find a listing of feature-length and short documentary films in different stages of production: completed, in post-production, in production and projects in development (in pre-production).

This booklet is an invitation to re-discover this distinctive, emotionally charged world of Croatian films. We hope that the films presented here will spark your interest.

Matija and Bojan grew up together. Their friendship ended abruptly when Bojan and his family abandoned their apartment, overnight, and left without saying goodbye. This happened in the early 1990s; they had been branded as 'undesirable' because they were of wrong nationality. Too young to understand the war or the reasons why he lost his friend, Matija decided to look for Bojan 15 years later.

Đuro Gavran (1982) graduated from the Faculty of Graphic Arts in Zagreb and is currently studying film and tv directing at the Academy of Dramatic Art. He has worked as a director of photography on a number of documentaries and has directed the short documentary Bojan (2010). He lives and works in Zagreb as a freelance designer, photographer, director of photography and director.

Every weekend The Celts football fans escape their washed-up small-town blues by cheering for a team from a nearby village. Although their hometown boasts a successful team that competes in Croatia's national league, these passionate football fans give their hearts, and their support, to a village team that plays in regional leagues. Over the course of one football season we follow the fortunes of The Celts supporters and their chosen team, immersing ourselves in the green and white rhapsody of jerseys, scarves and other fan paraphernalia, along with the mythology and folklore of The Celts.

Joško is 24 and has been diagnosed with a malignant tumour. His best friend, who is in perfect health, captures on camera the most intimate moments of Joško's exhausting struggle with his disease. The filming often takes place at times that Joško finds inconvenient. Yet sometimes the very act of filming turns into a highly effective therapy for both subject and filmmaker.

The Flood | Poplava

Košinj and its neighbouring villages, the low-lying areas of Lika, are tormented by floods every twenty years or so due to heavy rains and melting snow. Villages within a couple of kilometres of the River Lika find themselves submerged by water. The entire region becomes one huge lake where the only means of communication is by boat. This film follows the stories of two volunteers one Serbian and one Croatian. When the floodwaters come, they relocate trapped locals and deliver essential supplies – and they are the only remaining link with the rest of the world for their respective communities,

A postman from Split disappears without a trace and takes a rather hefty sum of someone else's money with him. The police find out that he has paid a visit to his sick infant daughter at the intensive care unit in the children's hospital. While the police try to trace the missing postman's whereabouts, various witnesses start coming forward, claiming that they saw him handing out money to people on the street. As the story of the postman begins to spread, he soon earns a new nickname – Robin Hood.

Gabriel | Gabriel

An erotic photographer discovers hidden doorways in the city of Zagreb while taking photographs of naked girls. A performance artist lies naked and covered with fish in a shop-window display, as part of her latest art project. Her third husband, whom she met at a cemetery (just like her first husband) paints her nails with nail polish. Two actors (a real life couple) simulate a rape scene. Chinese tourists discover whorehouses from the last century in present-day Zagreb while a singer yearns for the 'right one'. Who is Gabriel and how does he fulfil the wishes of those who open their hearts?

A fatal knife attack occurred in March, 2005, when Lucijan Magas (33) was murdered by his wife Ana Magas (27). Ana now regrets her act. How does she cope with her life and the consequences of what she has done? Will she ever be able to see her child again, and be a mother? This film examines an ordinary person who becomes a monster overnight. How does she get through the day, from morning to evening? How does she deal with the stigma of being a killer? 'Marked' as she is, how can she return from prison and integrate back into society?

Senida is a Bosnian Muslim girl who went missing in May of 1992 when Serbian troops entered her native village of Caparde in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In 1993 she was adopted by a Serbian family from Belgrade who renamed her Mila. When she reaches her teens Senida/Mila decides to search for her birth family. DNA tests confirm that Mila is the lost daughter of Muhamed and Senada Bećirović. The search is full of twists and turns and blind alleys, like a labyrinth, with frequent realisations that too many lies have been told to Mila about the fate of her loved ones. As time goes on, the quest for truth becomes increasingly stressful and exhausting for her. Mila Seeking Senida is a film about the search for one's own identity. Even though she gives the impression of strength way beyond her years, the inquisitive brown eyes of Mila must ask, whenever she looks at herself in a mirror: 'who am I really, where do I come from, what are my roots'?

Ivica Malčić is a contemporary Croatian painter born in 1964 in Zagreb. His paintings are based on urban life and urban legends. Making this film about Malčić the filmmaker wanted to explain the artist's work to a wider audience, and explore what is now left of the influential atmosphere of the 1980s, when depicting urban life was a matter of honour for the painter and for an entire generation of Croatian artists.

Three brothers live in a small village with no women, situated high in the mountains of southern Serbia, close to the border with Kosovo. Their greatest desire is to find brides. They have already tried, unsuccessfully, in nearby Serbian villages, but no local woman is willing to live on the top of a mountain. Across the border in Kosovo, there are villages with women and no men. The three brothers have no interest in the politics of the region: their concerns are purely personal and they have no objection to marrying Albanian women. However, if they bring Albanian brides to a Serbian village, the question will arise – would a marriage between enemies stand a chance?

The Way Out | Prolaz za van

The Way Out is an experimental film that uses documentary footage of a lengthy conversation with Mrs Gabrijela, who recently lost someone close to her. She shares her deepest emotions and most pleasant memories with the filmmaker, while trying to express her sorrow and anxiety. The filmmaker's involvement with the protagonist, the emotive subject matter and the process of filmmaking itself are all made explicit.

Am I Happy or What? Jesam li sretna?

Directed by Vanja Sviličić
2011 | 58'14" | DigiBeta | Colour

In the centre of Zagreb stands a small hotel where tradition and modern customs meet. It looks as if we have entered a welcoming, peaceful hotel: the kind of place where you recognize the faces of the chambermaids. Nothing is at it seems, however. Nor has the current economic situation bypassed this place. By observing the chambermaids going about their everyday business, and capturing real events as they unfold, we enter areas that hotel guests rarely see and in some cases are not allowed to see. We discover the secret world that lies beneath the surface of a luxury hotel: where the daily battle for work and survival provides a sharp contrast to the building's refined facade. This film shows us a very different side of hotel life. We observe the chambermaids' daily routines, while the global financial crisis threatens the security of their humble positions.

This film tells the story of a group of people from Zagreb who travel with Croatian, Nepalese and Tibetan guides on a journey from Nepal to the beautiful Tibetan highlands. The journey takes them on a meandering route from Kathmandu via Lhasa to western Tibet, to make a pilgrimage, or kora, to the sacred mountain Kailash. This itinerary allows the travellers to adapt quickly to life in the mountain ranges of Tibet, without succumbing to altitude sickness. The travellers' adventurous spirits and enquiring minds allow them to step willingly into this unfamiliar environment. Of the group, only the scriptwriter – Dubravka Manola – is familiar with this landscape. She took part in a similar expedition ten years earlier and has a strong spiritual connection with Tibet. The purpose of this very special film is to create an authentic record of the travellers' preparations in the Nepalese capital, Kathmandu, as well as their adventures and experiences in Tibet.

Blockade | Blokada

This film is a portrait of the biggest, longest and most politically relevant student demonstration ever organized in the Balkan region: the blockade of the Faculty of Social Sciences that took place during in Zagreb in April and May, 2009. It chronicles the preparations and meetings of a group of students as they plan to stage a sit-in at their faculty building. Their ultimate goal: to disrupt the regular educational timetable and protest against the introduction of tuition fees for higher education in Croatia. The film follows the students as they invade and occupy their faculty. It also shows their attempts to communicate with the Croatian media and with the authorities at the Ministry of Science, Education and Sport. This is an intimate, character-driven story that records the everyday lives of the student protestors during the blockade, focusing on their conflicts as well as their uncompromising struggle, right up to the final decision to end the blockade and continue their fight through other democratic means.

Family Meals | Veliko spremanje

Family Meals is a personal film that gives its audience a glimpse into a family's life 'behind closed doors' through the mealtime rituals to which the director submits so obediently. Taking a warm look at her eccentric, funny and open-minded family, the filmmaker uses humour and tenderness to address our need for recognition and acceptance of our differences.

This documentary is an ode to the workers and their work, in both a socialist and capitalist milieu. Using a film camera and slides from the 1950s the filmmakers document the mounting of a new furnace and cover the production of steel from raw materials to a seamless pipe.

The first part of this film focuses on human-interest issues, motivations and views on work. The second part of the film has two elements: a visual thread, similar to former communist propaganda, that follows the efforts to construct a new steel mill and manufacture a final product, and a contrasting sound design that draws exclusively on archive material from the time of the first five-year plan and socialist reform. The synergy between two seemingly unrelated threads gives the second part a uniquely distinctive and evocative quality.

Marija's Own | Marijine

A typical cross-section of bigoted neighbours in an apartment building are invited to a private party to honour the memory of the late Marija Violić, a fellow tenant, friend and grandmother. Instead of descending into sentimental cliché, the party soon evolves into a reality show, complete with all-singing, all-dancing interludes. The venue for this unique gathering is Marija's apartment and the music is provided by the hired musicians – a bunch of complete unknowns as far as the guests are concerned but in real life, the hugely popular Czech dance electro-trash band MIDI LIDI. And the purpose of this unique get-together? To finally fulfill a long overdue family obligation to the late, great, dearly departed Marija.

Gangster of Love | Gangster te voli

Directed by Nebojša Slijepčević

Est. date of completion: 09 | 2011
Estimated duration: 60'
CRO | ROU

Gangster of Love is an authentic documentary comedy. Nedjeljko Babić is a matchmaker and 25 years ago he left his job as a carpenter to start his God-given career – playing Cupid to lonely men and women. He soon became famous, partly because of his skill and partly because of his nickname – Gangster. He earned this nickname purely because of his appearance: he always wears dark sunglasses. This film follows Gangster as he tries to find a wife for an unmarried 40-year-old who is convinced he will never find a wife because he is just a poor and uneducated brick layer. For Gangster, this is the quest of his career: 'If I don't find him a wife soon, I will retire from business!'

Nenad Vižin's violent death was the catalyst for a unique phenomenon in the history of ex-Yugoslavia: 300 citizens of Rijeka signed a petition asking the police and the communist party to take responsibility. The petitioners were submitted to accusations and prosecutions. Although the events surrounding the death itself remain a mystery, it left its mark on a whole generation in Rijeka and is still a part of the social fabric of the city. This film depicts the mechanism of fear as an integral part of political systems and portrays the unique artistic rebellion that occurred in Rijeka in the 1980s as a reaction to fear and powerlessness.

A Letter to My Father Pismo ćaći

A Letter to My Father is a film that is best described as a drama-documentary hybrid. It is based on real events but is structured like a live-action feature film. The central theme is the relationship between a particular father and son, or more precisely, their communication issues. The characters are Mate (70) and his son Milivoj (44). The film has three distinct sections: an intimate confession from the son, a portrait of the father and a confrontation between the father and son.

Martićeva Street 14 D-F

Martićeva 14 D-F

In a small park, a communal toilet for hundreds of pets from the neighbouring buildings, the statue of Friar Grga Martić sits peacefully with his back to seven picturesque shops offering a variety of services to their customers. This 50-metre long consumer paradise comprises seven shop windows and two entrances. And it contains seven different micro-worlds that encapsulate contrasting segments of an urban metropolis. The shops' businesses and functions metaphorically correspond to our own (human) world and life itself.

Mechanical Figures – Inspired by Tesla

This non-linear interactive experimental film immerses the viewer in a complex and magical world that draws its inspiration from the inventions of the 19th-century genius Nikola Tesla. In addition, it challenges the viewer to explore the concept of creativity with the help of some of the greatest minds of the 21st century! Traversing the globe, from Zagreb to London, Paris, Budapest, New York, Tokyo and New Zealand, the film captures the past, present and future of technological and social development initiated by some of Tesla's major inventions, from the alternating current to radio. Mechanical Figures – Inspired by Tesla examines the synergy of creation and sustainability through a story about art, science and technology, featuring Laurie Anderson, Terry Gilliam, Marina Abramovic, Douglas Rushkoff, Christopher Priest, Andy Serkis and Hiroshi Matsumoto, amongst others.

Six decades ago a young man disappeared for three years. During this time his family sustained wounds that affect them to this day. This young man was my grandfather. With the fall of communism, the media began to mention the gulag-like camp Goli Otok (Naked Island); we then learned that my grandfather had been there. Today through Grandpa's fellow inmates, my family and sealed official archives I find a connection to my grandfather I never had in his lifetime. Naked is a film journey in pursuit of truth and closure for those participating in it; as we come together for the first time to reveal the torture, fear and shame planted in our lives by the 'Island of Broken Souls'.

According to statistics, the average male citizen of Sisak breathes clean air, smokes like a chimney and has one leg; and the average female citizen of Sisak breathes clean air, smokes as a chimney and has one breast.

Fear, listlessness, inertia and resignation are rife among the people of Sisak. Polluters poison them, and polluters feed them. We hear the confessions of three people struggling with illness and the parallel story of their city of fear and apathy: politicians that do not care about the citizens, polluters that do not care about pollution, eco-activists and youth activists to whom no one pays attention and the only reliable and regular events that follow each other rhythmically and relentlessly: the funerals.

From the spring of 1942 until autumn in 1943, the Italian fascist regime established a concentration camp for civilians in Gonars, a small town near Palmanova in northeast Italy. During the 18 months of its existence, more than 400 prisoners died, including 71 infants. The events that took place at Gonars were documented through the drawings of children and painters who were incarcerated there. This film gives a voice to child survivors of the camp, recording their eyewitness accounts and testimony after six decades. They recall their memories of physical and mental suffering; the constant hunger, thirst and cold they endured and their loss of identity and human dignity. How did their experiences scar them and how do these people, victims of a ruined childhood, live today?

See You in One Year! Vidimo se za godinu dana!

She was the scriptwriter for a documentary about oncology patients until she learned that she herself had breast cancer. As well as the doctors who guide her through the illness, the film also introduces three women whose treatment followed the same path as hers – surgery, chemotherapy, loss of feminine attributes including breasts and hair, radiotherapy, and an eventual return to a day-to-day life that will never be the same again. Through their personal confessions of doubts and fears, our heroines reveal the negligence and well-kept secrets of the Croatian healthcare system. In addition to testimony from our protagonists, we also hear from other cancer patients, scientists and doctors from Croatia and from overseas.

This film tells the tragic story of Ana Dragičević from Rijeka, who was committed to the psychiatric institution of Lopača at the age of 16 and treated for homosexuality. It asks the question, is the injustice she experienced an aberration in a system that normally works well – or is it a symptom of a more widely accepted social climate, and a metaphor for a 'sick' society? Above all, this is an emotional film about a girl who needs to re-establish her faith in people.

Sofia's Last Ambulance Posljednja ambulanta kola Sofije

This is a film about the regular working day of a doctor, a nurse and a driver working for the emergency ambulance service in Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria. Struggling against the absurdities of a crumbling healthcare system and scarcely earning enough to make a living, these three are simply trying to save lives. One of the most tragic casualties of the state is the medical system, and this is felt nowhere as strongly as in the ambulance service. After 20 years of capitalism, the number of Sofia's ambulances has dropped from 140 to 13. The system is close to a total breakdown.

In a city where 13 ambulances struggle to serve a burgeoning population of 3 million, 47-year old Krassi Yordanov is our unlikely hero: chain-smoking and saving lives in a non-stop 48 hour shift. Krassi is the emergency doctor on one of Sofia's last ambulances and today is the worst day of his life.

Tin-Can Buildings is a documentary about the inhabitants of a little-known neighbourhood in Split. We meet a dentist and writer; a tired ex-boxer who used to fight in Germany; a heavy metal band, the Bloody Hells, who mysteriously lost their charismatic lead singer and songwriter; an old football fan who established the Torcida supporters' club (the oldest football supporters' club in Europe); a self-taught historian with a myriad of paper clippings; a former hooligan now studying at night school; and a few other extraordinary individuals. This is a composite portrait of the people who make up this most unusual neighbourhood, with its shady makeshift cafes in huts with tin roofs next to the athletics tracks and the football club FC Hajduk holding a very special place in everybody's hearts.
