Dana Budisavljević

THE DIARY OF DIANA B.

The accomplished documentary maker Dana Budisavljević (Family Meals) has made her first feature film, a feature-documentary hybrid about a fascinating theme from the past, a Croatian version of Schindler's List.

When did you first hear the story of the "Croatian Schindler's List" and why do you think it is important to tell that story today?

I first came across the story completely by accident when a friend gave me the book Diary of Diana Budisavljević: 1941 – 1945. I was sure we were related since there is only one letter different in our names, but I had never heard of Diana before. The book was a non-fiction publication by the Croatian State Archives and the Jasenovac Memorial Centre; more a book for historians and a handful of readers who showed specific interest in the theme. But the book hid an unknown account of probably the biggest story about saving children during WWII. Diana was of Austrian descent, and lived in Zagreb with her husband, a doctor of Serbian descent, and their two grown daughters. Since the spring of 1941, Croatia was under the Third Reich, and the government was led by Ustashe who enforced racial laws against Jews, Serbs, and the Roma community. After discovering in the fall that Jewish and Orthodox children were being taken away to a camp near Zagreb, Diana organized a private humanitarian effort which would, by the end of the war, save more than 10 000 children. Due to historical circumstances, her name, as well as the names of her associates, would be forgotten.

In the country and region where I come from, a story about working together and rescuing people instead of waging war is very relevant and necessary. In Europe, at a time when we are facing an increase in extreme right-wing politics, we also need a reminder of what happens when we direct our fears toward our neighbours. On a universal level, this is a story of individual strength and how to react in a world overwhelmed by chaos.

The Diary of Diana Budisavljević is a story about compassion without expectations; about the best people during the worst possible times.

Why did you decide to do a fiction-documentary hybrid film, and not a "pure" documentary or fiction film?

The first and basic task was to tell a story that has been waiting more than 70 years to be told. Due to the sensitive theme and possible political controversy, I believed it was incredibly important that the story be historically correct.

At first I thought it would be a documentary, but after conducting research for the film it turned out there was no one alive today who remembers Diana. All that was left of her was the Diary. Her associates also died a long time ago. And the children who were saved were, at the time, too young to remember her.

And so I slowly started implementing elements of fiction film where Diana and her associates were played by actors, and the children, who today are people in their 80s, recall their memories that don't include Diana. I decided for a kind of inversion – the fictional parts would be functional and state the facts, while the documentary parts would portray the emotion.

My intention with the film was to bring together what was separated by history – Diana and the children. Everything else happened as it did and cannot be changed.

Vinko Brešan

WHAT A COUNTRY!

Director of Croatia's most watched films, Vinko Brešan, has made a new comedy. This time, he explains, it's a comedy of the absurd where politics and politicians are in the spotlight.

There are many characters, three parallel plots, and in the midst of it all is politics. What is the film about?

The film is comprised of three plots, in the centers of which are the General who wants to kill himself, the Minister who, during a groundbreaking ceremony for the construction of a new prison ward, locks himself inside the prison's memorial cell, and four older men who steal the first Croatian President Dr. Franjo Tuđman's coffin from his grave. All three stories represent both a personal and collective nightmare.

A political satire with a much darker, more serious tone than the previous comedies you are known for; how did you decide on this shift?

The shifts came on their own. To date, the characters in my comedies were regular "little" people with big ambitions and little competency to carry them out. Entertaining comedies come from the space between the wants and possibilities of these amusing characters. In What a Country!, the characters are people who have achieved their ambitions: the President, the Prime Minister, Minister of Internal Affairs, the General... A film where the characters have major power automatically becomes darker and more serious.

Among the large cast is Polish actor Daniel Olbrychski. Why did you choose not only him, but for him to act in Croatian?

Daniel plays the President of the Republic of Croatia. It's always a delicate matter, choosing an actor to play president, because the assumption is that millions of people voted him into power. This meant I had to choose someone who was naturally very charismatic, and an actor who audiences would believe people voted for. Daniel Olbrychski is a fantastic actor, a major star, and has the charisma of a leader. He was the logical choice for the role of the President.

Teona Strugar Mitevska

GOD EXISTS, HER NAME IS PETRUNIJA

Macedonian director Teona Strugar Mitevska directed her fifth feature film God Exists, Her Name Is Petrunija, a Macedonian-Slovenian-Belgian-French-Croatian co-production. It is a humorous story about a woman who decides to do the unthinkable – intervene in a man's world.

Can you tell us a little more about Petrunija; who is she?

Petrunija is an unemployed and single 31-year-old historian who lives with her mother and father. The film is based on a true event that took place in Macedonia several years ago. On 19 January, during Epiphany, in every town or village the high priest throws a cross in the water and people jump in to catch it. The belief goes that the one who catches the cross will have a happy and prosperous year. The problem is, only men are allowed to participate. Several years ago, a woman jumped into the icy water of a local river and caught the cross. Subsequently, the cross was taken from her. This is where the obstacle for Petrunija lies. Her goal is clear and simple – she fights for the right to exist according to the terms she believes in – justice. As the story progresses, Petrunija transforms from a small town character to a true force of change.

The film is about the position of women in a conservative, patriarchal society. It is a very real and universal topic that should resonate with audiences all over the world. Were you thinking about the #metoo movement while filming?

I think I was born a feminist, aren't we all?! I believe every woman should be and is a feminist. In this film, I just tried to present to the rest of the world my own experiences of the society I live in, and the message of the #metoo movement is a part of it. As a member of the most persecuted majority in human history, I humbly say enough is enough.

And it is not only the subject of the film, you managed to gather an excellent, almost entirely female creative team – producer, director, screenwriter, DoP,... all women. Was this your intention from the start?

I have been working with the same team for the past 10 years; a team takes time to build, and it is a team predominantly made of women. I guess throughout the years women ended up being more dedicated collaborators. Of course, being aware of the gender inequality in our industry, I do try to give an opportunity to female professionals every time an opportunity presents itself. It is the least I, or we, can do – stand and work in solidarity with each other.

God Exists, Her Name Is Petrunija

Bog postoji, njeno ime je Petrunija

• DIRECTED BY TEONA STRUGAR MITEVSKA

In Stip, Macedonia, every January a local priest throws a wooden cross into the river and hundreds of men dive after it. Good fortune and prosperity are guaranteed to the man who retrieves it. On a whim, Petrunija dives into the water and retrieves the cross. The men are furious – how dare a woman take part in their ritual? As hell breaks loose, Petrunija stands her ground.

Josipa is struggling with the consequences of sexual abuse she suffered as a child. Senad starts filming her, but by entering her life, he stops being an objective filmmaker and becomes a protagonist himself. The film gradually transforms into a personal and brutally honest story of an unusual relationship between two people.

Mladen Stanić

▪ A SMALL DETAIL
▪ WHITE ROOM

Mladen Stanić is a young filmmaker who recently filmed two shorts – A Small Detail and White Room. The latter won Best Croatian Short at the Zagreb Film Festival in 2018.

Can you tell us more about the two brothers, the main characters in White Room?

It is essentially a story about the relationship between my brother and myself. Our father died when we were very young. Being the older of the two, I always felt it was my duty to be a father figure to my younger brother. During the screenwriting process, I envisioned our mother passing away and leaving the two of us alone with each other and all of our problems. White Room is more or less a story about that. I changed a lot of things compared to real life, but the basics are the same; two brothers, love for their mother, and a personal history that they have yet to deal with.

In both films your characters are dealing with the death of a mother. What is it that draws you to this topic?

When my father died, I was two and my brother was yet to be born. If I'm not mistaken, our mother was three or four months pregnant at the time of his death. I guess being raised by a single mother, who played the parts of both parents during my upbringing, made my fear of her passing away even worse. Back when I was younger, I would sometimes think about what it would be like if she wasn't there. Once I started making movies, it kind of crept up on me and found its way into my films. White Room is specific in the sense that I intentionally chose that topic, but in other cases, it was subconscious more than anything.

Also, in both films, characters are solving family issues – that seems like your current thematic preoccupation?

I don't know if I could write a screenplay and be completely engaged in the process of turning it into a film if the story wasn't somewhat close or meaningful to me. Given that I have been writing my own movies, and that these shorts are my first films, those family issues are just something that I have to deal with creatively. Besides, family as such is the biggest inspirational gold mine that one can find. Filmmaking always deals with struggles, whatever they may be, whether they are personal or not. And families are all about the struggle, overcoming it or crumbling beneath the burden. I think that's what makes films relatable and interesting.

One of Us is the latest film by accomplished documentary maker Đuro Gavran. The film is about his classmate's very dark and intimate story.

What made you choose this story?

While preparing for the 15th anniversary of our graduation, I received an email from a classmate which absolutely shocked me. That same night the idea for the film came to me, I couldn't stop thinking about it. While the whole class was emailing each other regarding the details of when and where to meet, she said she wouldn't come and detailed her shocking life story. Her mail was my first direct contact with childhood sexual abuse. The email was so disturbing that for a week I didn't even know how to respond. I was overcome with emotions of anger, sadness, hate, pain, disbelief, and shock, and one question that continues to haunt me even today: how is it possible that we didn't notice a thing? I simply didn't know what to do and how to react to such difficult trauma. At the same time I knew that I had to make a film about this theme, which deeply affected me, and the feeling and state in which I found myself.

That's why the film One of Us is about a group of people who, after a long time, gather to celebrate their class anniversary sitting at the table knowing the fate of their classmate. The film explores universal social reactions to the discovery of childhood sexual abuse, without showing the victim or the abuser. In this film their identities are completely irrelevant. What is relevant are the reactions of the class/society who are a big part of this horrible social issue.

The viewer has the feeling that you barely forced yourself to discuss the theme during the dinner; how did your colleagues agree to be in the film?

All of my colleagues were in shock after reading the email. Most of us wanted to do something, but we simply didn't know what. Some looked into getting her legal counselling, some sought advice from experts, and I suggested we make a film. Each person thought they could be of help in some way. So the people in the film are the people who were brave enough to speak openly about this theme, share their experiences and their thoughts. It took us a long time to open up and discuss the issue. There was whispering going on amongst little groups throughout the dinner but the issue itself never came into focus. At one point, after nearly four hours I thought we would never discuss it, but then the conversation began.

Lucija Mrzljak

A DEMONSTRATION OF BRILLIANCE IN FOUR ACTS

Young animated film director and illustrator Lucija Mrzljak and her colleague Morten Tšinakov made an animated short A Demonstration of Brilliance in Four Acts. Having studied animation in Zagreb, Krakow, Prague, and Tallinn, Lucija decided to remain in Tallinn and work at Eesti Joonisfilm studio after graduating from the Estonian Academy of Arts.

Can you tell us a bit more about the film and its theme?

We don't think that our film (or any film) should be treated like some kind of mathematical puzzle that has one right answer every viewer should conclude. Each viewer has his/her own interpretation based on their personal point of view and every interpretation is correct. A film doesn't impose concrete statements; it opens up questions, creating room for thought, which every viewer can explore in their own way. People who have seen the film have given us many different ideas and they are always very interesting to hear, especially for us authors.

The film is visually truly impressive; what was your inspiration?

We were influenced by many people, some of them maybe subconsciously. From the visual side, we are mostly influenced by Estonian animation, especially Priit Pärn and Kaspar Jancis. Another influence was the Ukrainian author Igor Kovalyov. All three of these artists have influenced the way we write a story. Besides them, we've had many other influences. For example, Czech New Wave cinema in general, writers like Bohumil Hrabal, Daniil Harms, Günter Grass, and many others. Sometimes it is difficult to point out specific influences because it is rather a combination of different things.

You collaborated with famous Estonian animator Priit Pärn, what was his role in the making of the film?

Priit Pärn was our teacher during our studies at the Estonian Academy of Arts in Tallinn. We first thought of the idea for this film while we were still at the university. Priit agreed to be the advisor on the film and we talked to him occasionally from the early stages until the end of production. When we had a creative block, he gave us good advice on how to get out of a dead end. Priit is very good at spotting weaknesses in the script and he's not afraid to let you know. In that sense he's a perfect advisor for any film and he helped us a lot.

How Steel Was Tempered

Kako se kalio čelik

• DIRECTED BY IGOR GRUBIĆ

A father takes his son to an abandoned factory where he once worked. The building has long been reduced to a crumbling symbol of the new system. Nonetheless, the space will briefly be brought to life by recorded scenes of workers solidarity, inspiring a small gesture of defiance. That symbolic act will turn into a moment of catharsis and re-establish the relationship between the father and son.

Hrvoslava Brkušić

MOUNTAINS

Seasoned editor Hrvoslava Brkušić expresses herself as an artist through various forms of media – film, video and audio installations, performance. The experimental film Mountains was based on slides by Zora Film, a company that produced educational films in the 50s and 60s. From the materials, shot across the globe, and intended for geography lessons, the artist singles out just one motif – mountain landscapes.

How did you come across the Zora Film slides... and the idea to make a film from them?

I found the Zora Film slides through the local ads. I went to Rijeka and bought them; the woman who I bought them from said that she had been contacted by a number of museums, but due to bureaucratic complications no one bought the materials. I was lucky to have come across them and reacted immediately. Since the material has over a hundred films from various parts of the world I realised I had stumbled across valuable sources which inspired me to work with them. And that is how the idea for the film came about; the first film from this edition is Mountains. The plan is to continue to work with the materials and make one more film.

Why did you choose mountains as your motif?

I was looking for (non-)places which are familiar to everybody, also for places which could be anywhere, places which are precisely geographically determined but we don't know exactly where they are (for example, I removed Mount Fuji because it's very well known). This geographical diversity was interesting to me, united by the common motif of mountains.

What methods did you use?

We experimented with different techniques. The starting point I was interested in was transferring the photograph into a moving picture, then making some sort of cut using digital technology, DV and analogue technology, 16 mm film. The whole process took place in Klubvizija sc, a film laboratory, with support from Branka Valjin, where we filmed and hand-developed the film strips. I further processed and developed them on a trick desk, a makeshift editor's desk. After six weeks in the film lab, I went into editing. This is the most creative space for my work and interests. While in editing, I approached the material from a number of artistic perspectives and slowly began building segments that flowed one into the other. Sound plays a major role in the film, its goal being to stimulate the feeling of travelling, both physical and metaphysical. I collaborated with Hrvoje Nikšić on the music, while I developed the images with Ivan Slipčević.

Nowhere

Nigdina

• DIRECTED BY NELI RUŽIĆ

Exploration of the personal experience of departures/ returns and the rebuilding of identities. The film centres around two sculptures made by different artists, Neli Ružić and Bogdan Bogdanović, both set up at the Klis Fortress in different moments in history. The current states of these sculptures set in motion an archeology of time, of invisible and erased history.

In today's information age, when physical travel is no longer necessary, a search is undertaken to find the washed-up whale Albrecht Dürer once looked for on the beaches of Zeeland. Quest to North is a film about filmmaking, and this self-realisation transforms it into a cargo cult system of sorts. It is a recurring journey.

Filming in Croatia 2019

Croatia increased the cash rebate rate to 25%. An additional 5% has been approved for productions filming in regions with below average development. Positive changes in the incentives programme are set to encourage producers to explore great new locations for filming in Croatia.

Since the introduction of the Production Incentive Programme in 2012, numerous projects have chosen Croatia as a location for their productions. Star Wars, the greatest modern film mythology, set its casino city of Canto Bight in the old city of Dubrovnik. Natural beauties of the island of Vis served as a location for the film Mamma Mia! Here We Go Again, while vast and stunning locations of the island of Pag played the Arctic landscape in AMC's suspenseful thriller series The Terror, executively produced by Ridley Scott. Numerous locations throughout Croatia hosted the BBC One series McMafia. There is also the planetary popular Game of Thrones series, which set its city King's Landing in Dubrovnik, the city of Meereen in the fortress of Klis and the city of Braavos in Šibenik and Kaštilac. The German feature film The Master Butcher's Singing Club (directed by Ulrich Edel), was the first production filming in regions with below average development and using the 30% cash rebate. All these and many more projects choose Croatia not only for the stunning locations and the rebate scheme, but also for its exceptional local crews and production companies with impressive records in domestic and international production.

For more information about the Croatian Production Incentive Programme, visit filmingincroatia.hr or contact filmingincroatia@havic.hr.
